FRIDAY EVENING, JUNE 14, 1878.

HISTORY OF THE PEANUT.—Boys and girls are interested in peanuts, judging from what may be seen often in the steam cars. No one thinks more of her end than does the average young American of these handy sweetmeats. A gentleman of South Boston sends to the press of that city some account of the popular nut:—

"The question has often been asked, how and when did peanuts first appear in this country? About forty years ago the writer was in Wilmington, N. C., and became acquainted with a gentleman who, in speaking of peanuts, said that he believed he was the first person who introduced them into North Carolina; that when quite a young man he went on board a vessel that had put into Wilmington to distress, and he saw for the first time some nuts in bags, and they told him they came from Africa, and were known as pea or ground nuts."

They gave him a few handfuls, which he planted, and as they increased, they were scattered around, and became a staple article of culture. Certain it is, that at the time referred to, the cultivation of peanuts was almost wholly confined to the southern part of North Carolina. The production has rapidly increased, and they are now raised in large quantities in most of the Southern and many of the Western States, and are now considered as one of our prominent and staple articles of agricultural products. During the civil war, the Southern people made a very nice kind of oil from peanuts, and we have been told that in the warm countries east of us, when the olive oil crop fails, this oil is made to take its place.
